Dear Lisa,

Thank you very much for your email. As I pointed out in my previous email, we don't want to sell the domain name as it is a special present for a ten year old boy.

Best regards,

Richard

Dear Richard,

Thank you for your email. What would you consider to be a reasonable offer for which you would agree to transfer the domain name?

Thank you and best regards,

Lisa

Dear Lisa,

I'm sorry that you did not seem to understand my previous email. Your clients had the opportunity to purchase the domain name Narnia.mobi during the sunrise period of the .mobi launch. Although your clients have rights to prevent infringement of their trademark, they have no rights over this name and I am not infringing their trademark, so I see no reason why I should accede to your request.

Yours sincerely,

Richard Saville-Smith

Dear Richard,

Further to our conversation earlier this week, please advise whether you would be willing to transfer the narnia.mobi domain name to C.S. Lewis Pte Ltd. As mentioned in our call, in consideration of this transfer, our client would agree to reimburse you for the registration fees for (and possibly any other reasonable fees incurred relating to registration of) the domain name. We look forward to hearing from you regarding this offer at your earliest convenience.

Thank you and best regards,

Lisa

Dear Lisa,

Thank you for introducing yourself. Unfortunately you are incorrect to suggest that your clients have any rights over the name 'narnia.mobi'. Your clients had the opportunity to purchase this domain name during the .mobi sunrise period (see <http://www.icann.org/tlds/stld-apps-19mar04/mobi.htm>), as they failed to do so, their rights to this domain name are forfeit.

You seek an amicable settlement in which I simply hand over this domain name to you, but in your first contact, by phone, you threaten my wife with legal action and then you make the same threat to me by email if I don't accede to your demand. I'm sorry to say that this threatening tone doesn't make a very amicable impression. I bought the name for my ten year old son as a special present, to be given when the next film comes out. It is currently parked with a domain site as you can see. I am not in breach of your trademark and I am not prepared to simply hand over the name because you threaten me.

Yours sincerely,

Richard Saville-Smith

Dear Gillian,

Thank you for your email. We represent C.S. Lewis Pte. Ltd., the entity which owns all trademarks and copyrights relating to C.S. Lewis' "The Chronicles of Narnia" works. Our client owns trademark registrations for, inter alia, NARNIA and THE CHRONICLES OF NARNIA in the U.S., the EU and in a large number of other countries worldwide. It has come to our attention that Richard registered the domain name narnia.mobi which comprises, in relevant part, our client's trademark. In this regard, before taking any legal action, we wanted to ascertain whether this matter could be settled amicably, namely, to see if Richard would agree to voluntarily transfer the domain name to C.S. Lewis Pte. Ltd.

If you have any further questions, please let me know. You can reach me by calling: 00 1 212 626 4557.

Thank you and best regards,

Lisa

Hi Lisa,

I hope this finds you well. I found your email address online as I don't know how the 'phone code works with the number you left for New York works either! And, of course, I wanted to ascertain you were who you said you were!

Further to your 'phone call, do you think you could jot down what you said in an email to us? Thank you - either returning to this email - or Richard Saville-Smith, my husband, is just the same address except richard@saville-ferguson.co.uk. I would like to be sure that I pass on what you said completely accurately - especially given your mention of legal action!!! And, of course, it doesn't say anything on your firm's website about the estate of CS Lewis, though perhaps this is confidential. I can then show Richard the email on his return on Friday. He has just 'phoned and confirms we would like a sentence or two by email - unfortunately, he is in a very remote Scottish Highlands location and can only telephone intermittently for a short time on a landline as no mobile signal or email! Also, not a suitable event he is attending to discuss anything on the telephone.

Thanks very much and best wishes,

Gillian Saville-Ferguson
